

Cultivating Skills and Mindsets for the Future:

Critical Thinking, Collaboration, Communication, and Learner-Centered Learning

July 10-14, 2017 | Vernon, NJ

EDUCATION FOR SUSTAINABILITY • SYSTEMS THINKING • ORGANIZATIONAL LEARNING • YOUTH LEADERSHIP

Take advantage of this unique professional development opportunity for educators:

Focused, in-depth applied learning sessions facilitated by experienced practitioners and peers to help you cultivate your capabilities to teach and lead for the future. And teams can learn together across roles and departments! This highly interactive professional development program offers participants:

- Common tools and understandings that can be used — no matter what your role — so teams can successfully collaborate across departments and other boundaries to improve learning outcomes.
- Intensive workshops (core modules), learning journeys and enrichment sessions that provide theory, and most importantly, practice.
- Opportunities to share your work, and to teach and learn from peers.
- Ways to address recurring challenges such as equity and disproportionate discipline fundamentally, instead of with a quick fix that doesn't last.

Who Attends?

Teams of educators including teachers, school and district administrators at all levels, students, community members, and educational consultants from rural, suburban, and urban districts. Individuals are welcome too!

“Camp Snowball is a powerful week-long learning experience that has acquainted our organization with new resources and tools that are transforming our relationships and ways of working together. We are learning strategies to include new leadership voices, better analyze the root causes of our most daunting educational challenges, and become more accountable to each other, parents, students, and community.”

–L. Karen Monroe, Superintendent of Schools, Alameda County, CA

Systems Thinking in Education

Academy for Systems Change collective capacity for a scale that matters

“What I got from my experience at Camp Snowball was pretty cool. I learned how to approach thinking from different perspectives. I learned a new language. I built some great connections and expanded my knowledge of systems thinking. What was even more of a win for me was the time I spent with my team. We had 20 people from our district attend, some for their second year. It was a time to talk honestly about our mental models, get different perspectives and have honest conversations about the complex issues in our district. We came up with a start for solutions, but more importantly are leaving as sparks, as a team that speaks the same language, a team with a common goal to get more people to join the fire!”

–D.W., Junior High School Teacher

This year’s core modules include:

- Equity and Privilege: Overcoming Barriers
- Leading for Effective Learning: Systems Thinking and Organizational Learning in Schools and Districts
- Systems Thinking to Integrate Diverse Frameworks and Initiatives for Coherent Interventions: The Red Thread
- An Introduction to Systems Thinking for Elementary Schools
- Next Steps in Systems Thinking: Becoming A More Skillful Practitioner
- Making A Difference in Your School: Students and Faculty Working Together
- Structures for Collaborative Learning: A Systems Thinkers’ Approach

With more to come!

“Camp Snowball brought our team closer. And because of the new skills they gained, they are starting to see and think about their work differently – how does my work fit with what others in the district are doing? These tools can be used by everyone.”

– Steve Martinez, Superintendent, Twin Rivers USD, CA

Special thanks to Hewlett-Woodmere School District for their support.
